The South Bay's only publicly funded four-year university, California State University Dominguez Hills offers a range of highly respected graduate degree programs designed to advance students' knowledge, professional acumen, and leadership skills in specialized disciplines. As many programs are tailored for working adults, CSU Dominguez Hills' graduate courses provide flexible schedules that include evening and weekend classes, as well as online and mixed-mode options to help students progress quickly toward their academic and professional goals while balancing professional and personal obligations. Graduate students collaborate closely with faculty mentors on research, creative, and professional projects. Inside small, interactive graduate classes, graduate students supplement coursework with projects completed in supportive cohorts. Working students are encouraged to put classroom theory into practice at their current workplace to solve real-world challenges. Students emerge from their program with the practical experiences as well as specialized knowledge to become valued leaders, team-builders, collaborators, and innovators contributing to the success of organizations and their professions.

Several of CSU Dominguez Hills' graduate programs have received top rankings from U.S. News & World Report. For four years running, CSU Dominguez Hills was also ranked among the top 15 best master's universities in the nation for "contribution to the public good" by Washington Monthly.
